

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Distinguished by State v. Bagby, Wash., January 19, 2023

200 Wash.2d 417

Supreme Court of Washington,
EN BANC.

Janelle HENDERSON, Petitioner,
v.

Alicia THOMPSON, Respondent.

No. 97672-4

|

Argued March 16, 2021

|

Filed October 20, 2022

Synopsis

Background: Black motorist brought suit against white driver who rear-ended her, alleging that motorist's preexisting condition of Tourette's syndrome was exacerbated by the collision. After jury awarded motorist damages of only $9,200, motorist filed motion for a new trial or, in the alternative, for additur for an award of $60,000, which was the amount defense counsel proposed in closing argument. The Superior Court, King County, Melinda Young, J., denied motorist's motions for a new trial and for discovery sanctions, and motorist appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Montoya-Lewis, J., held that:

[1] motorist was entitled to an evidentiary hearing on her motion for new trial;

[2] trial court abused its discretion by failing to provide any remedy for driver's multiple discovery violations;

[3] on remand to trial court for new trial, case would be reassigned to a different trial judge; and

[4] spoliation instruction should have been given since motorist demonstrated prejudice resulting from the defense's refusal to produce additional surveillance-related evidence besides the 17-minute surveillance video.

Reversed and remanded.

McCloud, J., concurred and filed opinion in which Madsen, J., joined.

West Headnotes (54)

[1] Trial  Fair and impartial trial in general

Civil jury verdict affected by racism violates fundamental concepts of fairness and equal justice under the law.

[2] Appeal and Error  Particular Errors

If racial bias is factor in decision of judge or jury, that decision does not achieve substantial justice, and it must be reversed.

[3] New Trial  Bias or prejudice and formation or expression of opinion

In ruling on motion for new civil trial due to racial bias, ultimate question for the court is whether an objective observer could view race as a factor in the verdict, and an objective observer is one who is aware that implicit, institutional, and unconscious biases, in addition to purposeful discrimination, have influenced jury verdicts. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\).

1 Case that cites this headnote

[4] New Trial  Bias or prejudice and formation or expression of opinion

New Trial  Hearing

Trial court must hold hearing on new trial motion when proponent makes prima facie showing that objective observer could view race as factor in verdict, regardless of whether intentional misconduct has been shown or court believes there is another explanation. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\).

[5] New Trial  Bias or prejudice and formation or expression of opinion

New Trial ↗ Effect as to result

At hearing on motion for new trial on ground that race was factor in verdict, the party seeking to preserve the verdict bears the burden to prove that race was not a factor, and if that burden is not met, the court must conclude that substantial justice has not been done and order a new trial pursuant to rule authorizing new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59(a)(9).

[6] New Trial ↗ Hearing

Black motorist who alleged that her preexisting condition of Tourette's syndrome was exacerbated when white driver rear-ended her presented a prima facie case that objective observer could conclude that racial bias was factor in the jury's verdict awarding motorist only $9,200, and as such, motorist was entitled to an evidentiary hearing on her motion for new trial; driver's counsel repeatedly characterized Black motorist as "combative" and "confrontational," terms which evoked stereotype of "angry Black woman," driver's counsel cast driver in role of victim to whom jury owed sympathy, and driver's counsel alluded to racist stereotypes about Black women as untrustworthy and motivated by desire to acquire unearned financial windfall. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59(a).

[7] New Trial ↗ Affidavits and Extrinsic Evidence in General

At evidentiary hearing to determine if racial bias affected jury's verdict which awarded Black motorist only $9,200 for injuries she sustained when white driver rear-ended her, the court would presume racism was a factor in the verdict, and driver bore the burden of proving it was not for purposes of motorist's motion for new trial on ground that substantial justice had not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59(a)(9).

[8] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Failure to Disclose; Sanctions

Trial court abused its discretion in personal injury action stemming from vehicular accident by failing to provide any remedy for rear-ending driver's multiple discovery violations and for not providing motorist a hearing to assess appropriate sanctions.

[9] Appeal and Error ↗ Discretion of Lower Court; Abuse of Discretion

Appellate courts review a trial court's decision on motion for new trial for abuse of discretion. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59.

[10] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

Racial bias can affect verdict, so as to warrant new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done, even when it is not product of intentional misconduct by prevailing party or jury. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59(a)(9).

[11] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

Coded "dog whistle" language impermissibly allows the speaker to appeal to racial bias and then excuse that behavior by arguing that he did not intend to say anything racist for purposes of principle that new trial is warranted when racial bias is likely to have influenced verdict. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59(a)(9).

[12] New Trial ↗ Conduct of partyNew Trial ↗ Misconduct of Jurors in General

Under rule permitting new trial on the basis of misconduct of prevailing party or jury, a new trial is warranted when (1) the conduct complained of is misconduct, (2) the misconduct is prejudicial, (3) the moving party objected to the misconduct at trial, and (4) the misconduct was not cured by the court's instructions. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59(a)(2).

[13] New Trial ↗ Conduct of partyNew Trial ↗ Misconduct of Jurors in General

Rule permitting new trial on the basis of misconduct of prevailing party or jury contains procedural prerequisites that may render it inapplicable, such as when movant for new trial is the prevailing party who has had small judgment rendered in her favor. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(2\).

[14] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

Courts must focus on the effect of racially biased comments or actions, not the intent of the actor, when evaluating whether a verdict has been affected by racism, such that new trial is warranted on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[15] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

Rule authorizing new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done provides the appropriate lens for assessing the effect of racial bias on verdict, instead of the intent of any individual in determining whether a new trial is warranted. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[16] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

Verdict affected by racial bias is incompatible with substantial justice and requires a new trial pursuant to rule authorizing new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[17] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

Black motorist, who received damages of only $9,200 as result of being rear-ended by white driver, appropriately invoked rule authorizing grant of new trial on ground that substantial justice had not been done; motorist argued that substantial justice had not been done because driver's counsel's comments during cross-examination and closing arguments drew on racial stereotypes, and motorist argued that driver's counsel's comments, along with jury's small damages award and jury's alleged request for motorist to leave courtroom before the jury returned following their verdict, supported the conclusion that appeals to racial bias affected jury's verdict. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[18] Jury ↗ Competence for Trial of Cause

Civil and criminal litigants are equally entitled to a trial by an unbiased jury.

[19] Jury ↗ Competence for Trial of Cause

The right to a trial by an unbiased jury is not limited to those accused of committing crimes.

[20] Jury ↗ Competence for Trial of Cause

The right to trial by jury includes the right to an unbiased and unprejudiced jury, and a trial by a jury, one or more whose members is biased or prejudiced, is not a constitutional trial. U.S. Const. Amend. 6.

[21] Jury ↗ Competence for Trial of Cause

"Impartial jury" means an unbiased and unprejudiced jury, and allowing bias or prejudice by even one juror to be a factor in the verdict violates a party's constitutional rights and undermines the public's faith in the fairness of judicial system. U.S. Const. Amend. 6.

[22] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

When a civil litigant seeks a new trial on the basis that racial bias has affected the verdict, courts must ascertain whether an objective observer who is aware that implicit, institutional, and unconscious biases, in addition to purposeful discrimination, have influenced jury verdicts could view race as a factor in the verdict. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

1 Case that cites this headnote

[23] New Trial ↗ Failure of justice in general

New Trial ↗ Hearing

When a civil litigant, seeking new trial on the basis that racial bias has affected the verdict, makes a prima facie showing sufficient to draw an inference of racial bias, the court must grant an evidentiary hearing to determine if a new trial is warranted, and at this hearing, court presumes that racial bias has affected the verdict, and the party benefiting from the alleged racial bias has burden to prove it did not, and if this party cannot prove that racial bias had no effect on the verdict, then the verdict is incompatible with substantial justice, and the court should order new trial pursuant to rule authorizing grant of new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

1 Case that cites this headnote

[24] New Trial ↪ Hearing

Trial judges abuse their discretion in denying evidentiary hearing on motion for new trial when presented with prima facie showing that objective observer could view race as factor in verdict. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59.

[25] New Trial ↪ Failure of justice in general

Courts have obligation to ensure that trials are conducted fairly and to recognize when substantial justice has not been done for purposes of rule authorizing new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[26] New Trial ↪ Failure of justice in general

Race-neutral alternative explanation does not excuse the effect of language that appeals to racial bias for purposes of movant's motion for new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done due to racial bias likely influencing verdict. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

1 Case that cites this headnote

[27] New Trial ↪ Failure of justice in general

When participant in trial uses language that could evoke racist stereotypes, courts should not presume that such language has no effect on them or on jurors for purposes of movant's motion for new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done due to racial bias likely influencing verdict; the harm in appeal to racial bias is in its effect on decision maker, regardless of intent behind reference, because people will act on bias far more often if reasons exist giving plausible deniability. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[28] New Trial ↪ Failure of justice in general

Trial courts should be concerned about the possibility that racism has affected trial, and courts should grant a new trial when an objective observer could conclude that racism was a factor in the verdict pursuant to rule authorizing grant of new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[29] New Trial ↪ Failure of justice in general

When party raises a prima facie claim that racial bias affected the verdict, the court must hold evidentiary hearing to determine whether an objective observer could conclude that racial bias was a factor in the verdict, and if the evidence, taken as true, permits an inference that an objective observer could reach this conclusion, the party has made a prima facie showing that a new trial should be ordered pursuant to rule authorizing grant of new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Gen. R. 37; Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[30] New Trial ↪ Effect as to result

If the party that benefits from an appeal to racial bias cannot prove it did not affect the verdict, then substantial justice has not been done, and the court must order a new trial pursuant to rule authorizing new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[31] New Trial ↗ Effect as to result

Where racial bias has had an effect on the verdict, courts will not consider any claim that the error is harmless in context of party's motion for new trial under rule authorizing new trial on ground that substantial justice has not been done. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 59\(a\)\(9\).

[32] Appeal and Error ↗ Proceedings After Remand

On remand to trial court for new trial due to racial bias affecting verdict, Black motorist's negligence action against white driver who rear-ended her would be reassigned to a different trial judge, in light of the opinions the initial trial judge had already expressed as to the reasons for driver's counsel's behavior, as well as the reasons motorist was excluded from the courtroom when the jury returned its verdict.

[33] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Nature and Purpose

Spirit of cooperation and forthrightness during the discovery process is necessary for the proper functioning of modern trials.

[34] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Sufficiency; option to produce business records

Pretrial Procedure ↗ Compliance in general

Parties must fully answer all interrogatories and all requests for production, unless specific and clear objection is made. Wash. Super. Ct. Civ. R. 33\(a\), 34\(b\).

[35] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Discovering truth, narrowing issues, and eliminating surprise Liberal discovery rules aim to make civil trials a fair contest with the basic issues and facts disclosed to the fullest practicable extent.

[36] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Failure to Disclose; Sanctions

Courts have authority to deter unjustified or unexplained resistance to discovery through sanctions.

[37] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Mandatory duty or discretion

Sanction rules grant judges considerable discretion to determine what sanctions are proper in a given case in order to reduce the reluctance of courts to impose sanctions.

[38] Trial ↗ Failure of party to testify or to call witness or produce evidence

When a party intentionally withholds or destroys evidence, the trial court may issue a spoliation instruction for the jury to draw an inference that the missing evidence would have been unfavorable to the party at fault.

1 Case that cites this headnote

[39] Trial ↗ Failure of party to testify or to call witness or produce evidence

When a party intentionally withholds or destroys evidence, courts consider the potential importance or relevance of the missing evidence and the culpability of the adverse party when determining if court should issue a spoliation instruction for the jury to draw an inference that the missing evidence would have been unfavorable to the party at fault.

1 Case that cites this headnote

[40] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Parties in general

Culpable conduct must be connected to the party against whom a sanction is sought.

[41] Trial ↗ Failure of party to testify or to call witness or produce evidence

When a party intentionally withholds or destroys evidence, courts consider whether destruction of the evidence gave the culpable party an investigative advantage when determining if court should issue a spoliation instruction for the jury to draw an inference that the missing evidence would have been unfavorable to the party at fault.

1 Case that cites this headnote

[42] Appeal and Error ↗ Discretion of lower court; abuse of discretion

Sanctions decisions are reviewed for an abuse of discretion involving a decision that is manifestly unreasonable or based on untenable grounds.

[43] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Failure to Disclose; Sanctions

Trial ↗ Failure of party to testify or to call witness or produce evidence

Party's obstructionist behavior during discovery typically incurs sanctions ranging from limitations of the use of the material at trial, instructions to the jury on spoliation, monetary sanctions against the party engaging in these tactics, or, in the most egregious of circumstances, dismissal of the matter entirely.

[44] Trial ↗ Failure of party to testify or to call witness or produce evidence

Spoliation instruction should have been given since motorist, who was rear-ended by driver, demonstrated prejudice resulting from the defense's refusal to produce additional surveillance-related evidence besides the 17-minute surveillance video which was taken on one day during nine month period and which depicted motorist, who had Tourette's syndrome, at work with no observable tics; as motorist's claim involved preexisting condition that was aggravated by collision, the defense's strategy was to prove that motorist's symptoms had either remained in or returned to relatively manageable status, and the withheld video evidence was crucial to motorist's ability to challenge the 17-minute surveillance video.

[45] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Mandatory duty or discretion

Trial courts have wide latitude to determine what sanctions are appropriate.

[46] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Mandatory duty or discretion

Sanctions are mandatory when party violates civil rule.

[47] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Type and Amount

Court should determine severity of sanction commensurate with severity of wrongdoing in order to serve purposes of sanctions which are to deter, to punish, to compensate, and to educate.

[48] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Reasonableness or Bad Faith
Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Type and Amount

Intent is not prerequisite to imposing sanctions, though court may take wrongdoer's state of mind into account when determining severity of sanctions to impose.

[49] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Failure to Comply; Sanctions

When court finds intent to spoil or hide evidence, severe sanctions are appropriate.

[50] Pretrial Procedure ↗ Failure to Disclose; Sanctions

Trial ↗ Failure of party to testify or to call witness or produce evidence

Discovery sanctions can range from reprimands, excluding evidence, instructions on negative inference, default judgment or dismissal, or monetary sanctions on party, attorney, or firm.

[51] Costs, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Persons LiableCosts, Fees, and Sanctions ↗ Type and Amount

It is the trial court's role to determine what sanctions should be imposed and against whom.

[52] Appeal and Error ↗ Particular Errors and Defects Warranting Further Proceedings Below

Motorist's personal injury action against rear-ending driver would be remanded to trial court to determine whether to impose sanctions up to and including a new trial excluding surveillance video of motorist, testimony of witness who took surveillance video, or both, as well as reasonable costs and attorney fees for first trial, and court could consider in its sanctions analysis pretrial discovery violations as well as defense counsel's conduct during first trial; motorist sought information about surveillance throughout discovery period, motorist demonstrated prejudice resulting from defense's refusal to produce surveillance-related evidence, defense failed to produce relevant evidence despite motorist's efforts to obtain it through discovery, and defense counsel appealed to racial bias during trial.

[53] Judges ↗ Bias and Prejudice

Legal system is based on the premise of judicial neutrality, procedural fairness, and equal treatment.

[54] Courts ↗ Nature of judicial determination

Courts take a step toward achieving greater justice when the people who comprise courts comprehend the legacy of injustices built into legal systems, actively work to prevent racism before it occurs, and also recognize how participation in these systems may reify them, and one way judges can do so is to ensure that judges bring reality into sharp focus in their legal analysis.

*1016 Appeal from King County Superior Court, Docket No: 17-2-11811-7, Honorable Melinda Young, Judge

Attorneys and Law Firms

Carol Farr, Vonda Michell Sargent, The Law Offices of Vonda M. Sargent, 119 1st Ave. S. Ste. 500, Seattle, WA, 98104-3400, C. Steven Fury, Fury Duarte PS, 1606 148th Ave. Se Ste. 102, Bellevue, WA, 98007-6860, Counsel for Appellant.

Heather M. Jensen, Gregory S. Worden, Heather M Jensen, Lewis Brisbois Bisgaard & Smith LLP, 1111 3rd Ave. Ste. 2700, Seattle, WA, 98101-3224, Counsel for Respondent.

Andra Kranzler, Tenant Law Center, 100 23rd Ave. S., Seattle, WA, 98144-2302, Amicus Curiae on behalf of The Loren Miller Bar Assoc.

Antoinette M. Davis, Nancy Lynn Talner, American Civil Liberties Union of Wash., Po Box 2728, Seattle, WA, 98111-2728, Salvador Alejo Mungia II, Gordon Thomas Honeywell, 1201 Pacific Ave. Ste. 2100, Tacoma, WA, 98402-4314, Amicus Curiae on behalf of Aclu WA.

Leah Nicole Salerno, Attorney at Law, 307 Ne Thornton Pl. Apt. 501, Seattle, WA, 98125-8051, Sarah Margaret Koh Eaton, Disability Rights Washington, 315 5th Ave. S. Ste. 850, Seattle, WA, 98104-2691, Amicus Curiae on behalf of Disability Rights Washington.

Neil Martin Fox, Law Office of Neil Fox, PLLC, 2125 Western Ave. Ste. 330, Seattle, WA, 98121-3573, Amicus Curiae on behalf of National Lawyers Guild.

Opinion

MONTOYA-LEWIS, J.

421 [1] [2] ¶1 This court has stated, unequivocally, that we owe a duty to increase access to justice, reduce and eradicate racism and prejudice, and continue to develop our legal system into one that serves the ends of justice. Open Letter from Wash. State Sup. Ct. to Members of Judiciary & Legal Cmty. 1 (June 4, 2020), <http://www.courts.wa.gov/content/publicUpload/Supreme%20Court%20News/Judiciary%20Legal%20Community%20SIGNED%20060420.pdf>. Recognizing that a verdict affected by racism violates fundamental concepts of fairness and equal justice under law, we recently held in a criminal case that race-based prosecutorial misconduct can never be “harmless error.” State v. Zamora, 199 Wash.2d 698, 722, 512 P.3d 512 (2022). Today we emphasize that while the legal framework differs in the civil context, the same principle applies. Racism is endemic, and its harms are not confined to any place, matter, or issue. “We show up with the same melanin in our skin whether it is a civil case or … a criminal case.” Wash. Sup. Ct. oral argument, Henderson v. Thompson, No. 97672-4 (Mar. 16, 2021), at 56 min., 01 sec. to 56 min., 8 sec., video recording by TVW, Washington State’s Public Affairs Network, <http://www.tvw.org>. Whether explicit or implicit, purposeful or unconscious, racial bias has no place in a system of justice.¹ If racial bias *422 is a factor in the decision of a judge or jury, that decision does not achieve substantial justice, and it 1017 must be reversed. See Zamora, 199 Wash.2d at 721, 512 P.3d 512.

¶2 In this case, Janelle Henderson, a Black woman, and Alicia Thompson, a white woman, were involved in a motor vehicle collision. Thompson admitted fault for the collision but made no offer to compensate Henderson for her injuries. Henderson claimed that her preexisting condition was seriously exacerbated by the collision and sued for damages. During the trial, Thompson’s defense team attacked the credibility of Henderson and her counsel—also a Black woman—in language that called on racist tropes and suggested impropriety between Henderson and her Black witnesses. The jury returned a verdict of only $9,200 for Henderson. Henderson moved for a new trial or additur on the ground that the repeated appeals to racial bias affected the verdict, yet the trial court did not even grant an evidentiary hearing on that motion. The court instead stated it could not “require attorneys to refrain from using language that is tied to the evidence in the case, even if in some contexts the language has racial overtones.”¹ Clerk’s Papers (CP) at 180-81.

[3] [4] [5] ¶3 That reasoning gets it exactly backward. In ruling on a motion for a new civil trial, “[t]he ultimate question for the court is whether an objective observer (one who is aware that implicit, institutional, and unconscious biases, in addition to purposeful discrimination, have influenced jury verdicts in Washington State) could view race as a factor in the verdict.” State v. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d 647, 665, 444 P.3d 1172 (2019). A trial court must hold a hearing on a new trial *423 motion when the proponent makes a prima facie showing that this objective observer could view race as a factor in the verdict, regardless of whether intentional misconduct has been shown or the court believes there is another explanation. At that hearing, the party seeking to preserve the verdict bears the burden to prove that race was not a factor. If that burden is not met, the court must conclude that substantial justice has not been done and order a new trial. CR 59(a)(9). Here, the trial court abused its discretion by failing to grant an evidentiary hearing and also by failing to impose any sanctions for Thompson’s discovery violations. We reverse and remand for further proceedings consistent with the framework we announce today.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

¶4 In June 2014, Thompson rear-ended Henderson’s car, injuring Henderson with whiplash. Henderson had a preexisting condition of Tourette’s syndrome, a neurological disorder characterized by repetitive, involuntary movements and vocalizations called “tics.” She claimed the injury and stress from the collision seriously exacerbated her symptoms, causing aggravated tics and debilitating chronic pain. Henderson filed suit against Thompson, seeking compensation for physical and mental pain and for medical care necessitated by the collision. Thompson admitted that she caused the collision but made no offer in settlement, and the parties proceeded to a jury trial on the question of damages.

A. Trial

¶5 Henderson’s lead trial counsel was a Black woman; Thompson’s was a white woman. The judge was a white woman, and there were no Black jurors. The only Black people in the courtroom were Henderson, her attorney, and her lay witnesses.

¶6 Henderson testified that she managed her Tourette’s syndrome with physical therapy and other medical care for *424 most of her life, but since the collision, her increased symptoms have included new and more intense tics and severe pain. She requested a damages award of approximately $3.5 million, based on an amount of $250 per day and actuarial estimate of her life expectancy.

¶7 Henderson’s treating physicians and several friends and family members testified that the injury from the collision had a profound effect on her Tourette’s symptoms, pain, and quality of life. In challenging the extent of Henderson’s injuries, the defense presented a short surveillance video of Henderson taken about nine months after the collision, where she appeared at work with no observable tics. Two medical experts for the defense opined that any injury from the collision was likely minor and resolved 1018 within about nine months, based, in part, on the video.

¶8 Henderson's four lay witnesses each characterized Henderson as active and energetic prior to the accident, despite minor tics like occasional shrugging and coughing. But they said after the collision she was plagued by chronic pain and pronounced tics that prevented her from exercising and going out in public. Three of her testifying friends and family were Black women, and those witnesses each used the phrase "life of the party" to describe Henderson prior to the collision, in contrast with her condition after the collision. 1 Verbatim Report of Proceedings (VRP) (May 29, 2019) at 344; 2 VRP (May 30, 2019) at 482, 516.

¶9 At closing, defense counsel argued that Henderson and her witnesses were not credible. Henderson points out several instances from Thompson's closing argument as appeals to racial bias.

¶10 First, defense counsel characterized Henderson as "confrontational" and "combative" in her manner of testimony. In describing her cross-examination of Henderson, defense counsel said Henderson "was confrontational with me" and called one of her answers "Ms. Henderson's challenge." 3 VRP (June 6, 2019) at 1195-96 (emphasis added). Later, she characterized Henderson as "combative" and *425 therefore not credible: "But when it's my turn to cross-examine her, she's not interested in the search for truth; she's interested in being combative. ... You know, it was—it was quite combative. There's—there's definitely no search for the truth there." Id. at 1222 (emphasis added). Defense counsel also directly contrasted her description of Henderson's demeanor with Thompson's, using similarly charged terms: "By comparison, my client took the stand, obviously feeling, I think, intimidated and emotional about the process and—and rightly so, and provided you with—with genuine and authentic testimony." Id. (emphasis added).

¶11 Second, defense counsel suggested that the only reason for the trial was Henderson's desire for a financial windfall. She said, "It's just a simple car accident; it's a simple rear-end; why are we going through this exercise? And it seems pretty evident that the reason we're going through this exercise is because the ask is for three and a half million dollars." Id. at 1195. To put a finer point on it, she suggested that Henderson waited to report the collision to her neurologist until she realized she could profit from the collision: "And she doesn't mention that to her doctor. And you have to ask yourself why. Is it because $3.5 million hadn't coalesced in her mind yet?" Id. at 1198 (emphasis added). As to the amount of damages, defense counsel called Henderson's calculation of damages at $250 per day "exceptional," but told the jury that if they found that Henderson was injured and her condition was aggravated by the collision, they should apply that value only to the first 8 months of the collision. Id. at 1221. She calculated that "by those numbers, that's $60,000 for a rear-end accident. That's a lot of money." Id.

¶12 Additionally, she described the testimony of Henderson's friends and family as "inherently biased." Id. at 1216. She suggested the Black lay witnesses' shared use of a popular idiom to describe Henderson was a sign of collusion: "I thought it was interesting also that all [three] of those witnesses used the exact same phrase when describing *426 Ms. Henderson before the accident: life of the party. Almost—almost like someone had told them to say that." Id. at 1213 (emphasis added). She also underscored the detail that at one point, Henderson's chiropractor gave her a job in his office, as if it suggested some impropriety in their relationship: "In terms of bias, I thought it was interesting that [her chiropractor] kind of threw out there the tidbit that suggests that nothing untoward, of course, but he has more than just a patient/physician relationship with—with Ms. Henderson." Id. at 1206.

¶13 The jury found that Henderson was injured in the collision but awarded her damages of only $9,200. Following the verdict, Henderson was asked to leave the courtroom before the jury returned. This occurred off the record. Henderson and her legal team recall this coming as a request from the jury.

1019 B. Discovery Issues

¶14 This case also presents issues related to violations of the discovery rules. After the collision, Thompson's defense team hired the private investigation company Probe Northwest Inc. to conduct surveillance on Henderson. The defense identified a Probe employee named Tyler Slaeker as an expert witness who "took video recordings of the surveillance." 2 CP at 217.² When Henderson issued a subpoena duces tecum for documents regarding surveillance, the defense produced only Slaeker's resume and a 17-minute video of Henderson taken in March 2015.

¶15 When deposed, Slaeker equivocated about whether and how much documentation or other video existed. He believed Probe conducted surveillance on Henderson for about 9 months following the collision, though he followed her only on the day of March 11, 2015. Initially, he said he watched her for over 4 hours and recorded video for about 1 *427 hour; then, he said he recorded for only part of that time. Slaeker also said he had sent surveillance notes via text message to his supervisor, which she used to write a report. But he had no record of the messages, and Thompson's counsel told him the report was privileged. He said he prepared for the deposition by reviewing the 17-minute video and some "notes" for 3 hours, but he equivocated about whether they were his original surveillance notes, the Probe report, or new notes he took while reviewing the video. 1 CP at 40, 64.

¶16 Henderson made numerous attempts to obtain more information about the surveillance on her. The court denied her first motion to exclude Slaeker as a witness or compel him to produce responsive documents under the subpoena duces tecum. The court did order Slaeker to produce the notes that formed the basis of the report, but he never did. When Henderson issued interrogatories and requests for production regarding the surveillance, the defense produced a single responsive document indicating that Probe billed $5,833.68 for 78.83 hours of surveillance on Henderson between July 2014 and March 2015. They claimed the only other person who conducted surveillance on Henderson was the Probe owner, who drove to Henderson's home at one point but took no notes. They provided no information about who conducted the other 70-some hours of surveillance or what they observed.

¶17 Over a year and a half of litigation, despite the court order and Henderson's various attempts to obtain additional information through the discovery rules, the defense never turned over any notes or additional video. When Henderson again moved to exclude Slaeker's testimony or to issue a spoliation instruction for the jury, the trial judge initially granted the instruction. But Thompson moved for reconsideration, and the judge reserved ruling until after Slaeker's testimony, despite noting that "such a failure to keep the raw data is sloppy at best and manipulative at worst." 1 CP at 103. The defense team finally produced *428 what it represented to be the Probe report two weeks before trial, when the court ruled it was not work product.

¶18 At trial, the 17-minute surveillance video was played for the jury, and Slaeker was permitted to testify about his day of surveillance. Neither Slaeker nor Thompson could provide any relevant testimony regarding the document calculating 78.83 hours of surveillance work, the rest of the surveillance, or any withheld evidence. The court eventually ruled that it would not instruct the jury on spoliation, even though it "share[d] Plaintiff's deep suspicion that there is other video out there." 3 VRP (June 4, 2019) at 1145. The court did not impose any sanctions.

C. Procedural History

¶19 After the verdict, Henderson filed a CR 59 motion for a new trial or, in the alternative, for additur for an award of $60,000—the amount defense counsel proposed in closing argument. Henderson argued that the court erred in failing to give a spoliation instruction regarding the surveillance and, 1020 moreover, that defense counsel's "biased statements in closing likely influenced the jury's unconscious bias against plaintiff such that justice was not done." 1 CP at 134. She pointed to the award far below even the amount the defense had suggested and to the request for Henderson to leave the courtroom as evidence showing the appeals to racial bias must have affected the verdict. She and her attorneys also filed declarations recalling the judge saying the jury wanted Henderson to leave the courtroom before they would exit the jury room, which was "humiliating and embarrassing." Id. at 172-77.

¶20 The court denied Henderson's motion. With respect to spoliation, the court concluded that there was "scant specific evidence" that additional video or notes had been withheld or destroyed. Id. at 179. With respect to the exclusion of Henderson from the courtroom, the judge said it was her own regular practice to ask parties to leave the courtroom before the jury returned after a verdict and not a *429 request by the jury. As to racial bias, the court acknowledged that "using the terms combative in reference to the plaintiff and intimidated in reference to the defendant can raise such bias" but decided "[t]he terms were tied to the evidence in the case, rather than being raised as a racist dog whistle with no basis in the testimony" and "[t]he court cannot require attorneys to refrain from using language that is tied to the evidence in the case, even if in some contexts the language has racial overtones." Id. at 180-81.

¶21 This court's decision in Berhe was filed the next day. Henderson brought a motion for an evidentiary hearing under Berhe, but the court denied her request. She appealed the court's denial of her motions for a new trial and for discovery sanctions; we granted direct review. The Loren Miller Bar Association (LMBA) and the American Civil Liberties Union of Washington, Disability Rights Washington, and the Seattle Chapter of the National Lawyers Guild filed briefs of amici curiae.

ANALYSIS

[6] [7] [8] ¶22 We hold that Henderson is entitled to an evidentiary hearing on her new trial motion under CR 59 because she presented a prima facie case that an objective observer could conclude that racial bias was a factor in the jury's verdict. At that hearing, the court must presume racism was a factor in the verdict and Thompson bears the burden of proving it was not. We also hold that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to provide any remedy for Thompson's multiple discovery violations, and that Henderson is entitled to a hearing to assess appropriate sanctions. We reverse and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

*430 I. Substantial Justice

[9] ¶23 We have long recognized that Washington courts have the inherent power to grant a new trial on the ground that substantial justice has not been done. Cabe v. Dep't of Lab. & Indus., 35 Wash.2d 695, 697, 215 P.2d 400 (1950). Indeed, at common law, the right to a jury trial has "existed side by side for centuries" with the trial judge's "historically inherent power" to set a verdict aside and grant a new trial on the ground that substantial justice has not been done. Bond v. Ovens, 20 Wash.2d 354, 356-57, 147 P.2d 514 (1944). We have described this power to grant a new trial when substantial justice has not been done not only as within a trial judge's authority but as part of their affirmative duty. See, e.g., Severns Motor Co. v. Hamilton, 35 Wash.2d 602, 604, 214 P.2d 516 (1950); Potts v. Laos, 31 Wn.2d 889, 897, 200 P.2d 505 (1948); Brammer v. Lappenbusch, 176 Wash. 625, 631, 30 P.2d 947 (1934). Courts retain this inherent power, even while court rules and statutes codify it. Brammer, 176 Wash. at 629-32, 30 P.2d 947; CR 59(a)(9). We review a trial court's decision on a motion for a new trial for abuse of discretion. Turner v. Stime, 153 Wash. App. 581, 588, 222 P.3d 1243 (2009).

¶24 Our commitment to substantial justice rings hollow if we fail to recognize that racial bias often interferes with achieving justice in our courts.³ The LMBA amicus briefing 1021 shares perspectives from its members, demonstrating that racial bias continues to affect litigants' ability to receive a fair and impartial civil trial. Its members "have witnessed the effect of bias in Washington's courts and suffered humiliation, condescension, and contempt expressed or allowed *431 by judges in the courtroom. They have been improperly referenced during court proceedings, singled out, and had their expertise questioned due to bias." Amicus Curiae Br. of LMBA at 5-6. This kind of treatment diminishes the legal profession by continuing to tell lawyers of color that their presence seems unusual and surprising. It also undermines litigants' rights.⁴ For example, "[o]ne [LMBA] member described how they must consider not only how the jury will perceive their civil clients but also the biases opposing counsel may seek to use to undermine a person's credibility; it is difficult when members hear colleagues say, 'she is very Black—how will she come off to the jury?'" Id. at 7; see also Turner, 153 Wash. App. at 592-93, 222 P.3d 1243 (recognizing juror misconduct involving racial bias directed at an attorney likely affected the verdict).

¶25 Washington courts have recognized that racist misconduct by the prevailing party or jurors may justify a new trial under CR 59(a)(2). For example, in 1931, this court ordered a new trial when a white attorney in a civil case argued for a verdict against a company based in Japan because "'we don't like Japanese [people] and they don't like us.'" Schotis v. N. Coast Stevedoring Co., 163 Wash. 305, 316, 1 P.2d 221 (1931) (quoting the record). More recently, we ordered a new criminal trial when the prosecutor exaggerated the pronunciation of the word "police" as "'po-leese'" and argued that Black witnesses were not credible because "'[B]lack folk don't testify against [B]lack folk.'" State v. Monday, 171 Wash.2d 667, 671-74, 257 P.3d 551 (2011) (quoting the record). We strengthened the rule in Monday just last term by recognizing that appeals to racial bias that affect a verdict are not subject to review for harmless error—they require reversal. Zamora, 199 Wash.2d at 721, 512 P.3d 512. In Zamora, we vacated convictions after a prosecutor *432 repeatedly invoked negative stereotypes about Latinx people, immigration, and crime during voir dire, with the apparent purpose to highlight the defendant's perceived ethnicity. Id. at 719, 512 P.3d 512.

¶26 The Court of Appeals has also affirmed the grant of a new trial based on racial bias in a civil case, where during deliberations some jurors referred to counsel, who was of Japanese descent and whose last name was "Kamitomo," as "'Mr. Kamikazi' or 'Mr. Miyashi' or 'Mr. Miyagi.'" Turner, 153 Wash. App. at 585-86, 222 P.3d 1243 (quoting the record). Similarly, the Court of Appeals ordered a new trial for the Black defendant in State v. Jackson, where a Black juror overheard a white juror discussing how he disliked “‘socializ[ing] with the coloreds [sic],’” because, “[p]resumptively, these statements demonstrated that juror X held certain discriminatory views which could affect his ability to decide Jackson's case fairly and impartially.” 75 Wash. App. 537, 540, 543, 879 P.2d 307 (1994) (quoting the record). Each of these cases underscores that a new trial is warranted when racial bias is likely to have influenced a verdict.

[10] [11] [12] [13] ¶27 While racial bias is often analyzed in terms of misconduct by the jury or the party who prevails at trial, this case demonstrates why CR 59(a)(2) cannot address every instance of racism in our civil justice system.⁵ Racial bias can affect a verdict 1022 even when it is not the product of intentional misconduct by the prevailing party or jury. “Not all appeals to racial prejudice are blatant. Perhaps more effective but just as insidious are subtle references.”⁶ Monday, 171 Wash.2d at 678, 257 P.3d 551. Coded “dog whistle” language impermissibly *433 allows the speaker to appeal to racial bias and then excuse that behavior by arguing they did not intend to say anything racist.⁷ See id. at 678-79, 257 P.3d 551 (“Like wolves in sheep's clothing, a careful word here and there can trigger racial bias.” (citing studies)).

[14] [15] [16] ¶28 Moreover, racial bias “can influence our decisions without our awareness,” making it uniquely pernicious because “people will act on ... bias far more often if reasons exist giving plausible deniability.” Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 657, 444 P.3d 1172; State v. Saintcalle, 178 Wash.2d 34, 49, 309 P.3d 326 (2013) (plurality opinion) (citing studies), abrogated on other grounds by City of Seattle v. Erickson, 188 Wash.2d 721, 398 P.3d 1124 (2017); see also Ian F. Haney López, Institutional Racism: Judicial Conduct and a New Theory of Racial Discrimination, 109 Yale L.J. 1717, 1757-61, 1764-69 (2000) (describing how discrimination models that centralize intent fail to address many forms of racism); Charles R. Lawrence III, The Id, the Ego, and Equal Protection: Reckoning with Unconscious Racism, 39 Stan. L. Rev. 317, 330 (1987) (“[Racism] is a part of our common historical experience and, therefore, a part of our culture. It arises from the assumptions we have learned to make about the world, ourselves, and others as well as from the patterns of our fundamental social activities. ... We attach significance to race even when we are not aware that we are doing so.”). *434 Courts must therefore focus on the effect of racially biased comments or actions, not the intent of the actor, when evaluating whether a verdict has been affected by racism. By focusing on whether substantial justice has been achieved, CR 59(a)(9) provides the appropriate lens for assessing the effect of racial bias instead of the intent of any individual in determining whether a new trial is warranted. A verdict affected by racial bias is incompatible with substantial justice and requires a new trial under CR 59(a)(9).

[17] ¶29 Henderson appropriately invokes CR 59(a)(9) as one basis for her new trial motion. She argues that substantial justice has not been done because defense counsel's comments during cross-examination and closing arguments that drew on racial stereotypes, along with the jury's astonishingly small award and the request to remove Henderson from the courtroom, support the conclusion that appeals to racial bias affected the verdict.

A. The Berhe Inquiry

¶30 This court recently announced, in a criminal case, a two-step inquiry for determining whether racial bias has affected the verdict. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 665-69, 444 P.3d 1172. Under Berhe, the court must grant an evidentiary hearing upon a prima facie showing of evidence that, if “taken as 1023 true, permits an inference that an objective observer who is aware of the influence of implicit bias could view race as a factor in the jury's verdict.” Id. at 666, 444 P.3d 1172. This standard speaks to possibility, not certainty, and to impact, rather than intent.

[18] [19] [20] [21] ¶31 Civil and criminal litigants are equally entitled to a trial by an unbiased jury. Contrary to Thompson's contention, the right to a trial by an unbiased jury is not limited to those accused of committing crimes. “‘The right to trial by jury includes the right to an unbiased and unprejudiced jury, and a trial by a jury, one or more whose members is biased or prejudiced, is not a constitutional trial.’” *435 Mathisen v. Norton, 187 Wash. 240, 245, 60 P.2d 1 (1936) (civil case) (quoting Alexson v. Pierce County, 186 Wash. 188, 193, 57 P.2d 318 (1936) (civil case)); see also Allison v. Dept. of Lab. & Indus., 66 Wash.2d 263, 265, 401 P.2d 982 (1965) (civil case). “An ‘impartial jury’ means ‘an unbiased and unprejudiced jury,’ and allowing bias or prejudice by even one juror to be a factor in the verdict violates a defendant's [or a plaintiff's] constitutional rights and undermines the public's faith in the fairness of our judicial system.” Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 658, 444 P.3d 1172 (quoting Alexson, 186 Wash. at 193, 57 P.2d 318). There is no reason to hold our state's courts to any lower standard than the "objective observer" articulated in GR 37 or to tolerate a lesser standard of justice in a civil setting than what we require in a criminal setting under Berhe.

[22] [23] ¶32 Therefore, we apply a similar framework when a civil litigant seeks a new trial on the basis that racial bias affected the verdict. We hold that upon a motion for a new civil trial, courts must ascertain whether an objective observer who is aware that implicit, institutional, and unconscious biases, in addition to purposeful discrimination, have influenced jury verdicts in Washington State could view race as a factor in the verdict. See Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 665, 444 P.3d 1172. When a civil litigant makes a prima facie showing sufficient to draw an inference of racial bias under this standard, the court must grant an evidentiary hearing to determine if a new trial is warranted. Id. at 665-66, 444 P.3d 1172. At the hearing, the trial court is to presume that racial bias affected the verdict, and the party benefiting from the alleged racial bias has the burden to prove it did not. Cf. Monday, 171 Wash.2d at 680, 257 P.3d 551 (placing the burden of proof on the State when a prosecutor allegedly appeals to racial bias). If they cannot prove that racial bias had no effect on the verdict, then the verdict is incompatible with substantial justice, and the court should order a new trial under CR 59(a)(9).

¶33 We conclude that Henderson has made a prima facie showing that an objective observer could view race as a factor in the verdict, and the trial court erred in denying an *436 evidentiary hearing. We take this opportunity to provide guidance on how this prima facie showing should be assessed.

B. Henderson Has Established a Prima Facie Case

¶34 Henderson alleges that Thompson's counsel primed the jurors with appeals to racial bias throughout the trial. Henderson points to numerous instances that permit an inference that an objective observer could conclude race was a factor in the verdict. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 666, 444 P.3d 1172. For example, defense counsel repeatedly characterized Henderson as "combative" and "confrontational." These terms evoke the harmful stereotype of an "angry Black woman." See Trina Jones & Kimberly Jade Norwood, Aggressive Encounters & White Fragility: Deconstructing the Trope of the Angry Black Woman, 102 Iowa L. Rev. 2017, 2049 (2017). This harmful negative stereotype affects the way others perceive and interact with Black women, and it can have significant negative social and interpersonal consequences for Black women, including influencing their experience and reasonable expression of anger.

¶35 Defense counsel also directly contrasted Henderson with Thompson, describing Thompson as, "[b]y comparison, ... intimidated and emotional about the process and—and rightly so, and provid[ing] ... genuine and authentic testimony." 3 VRP (June 6, 2019) at 1222. The direct contrast between defense counsel's depiction of Henderson as 1024 "confrontational" and "combative" and her depiction of Thompson as "rightly" "intimidated" and "emotional" distorted the roles of plaintiff and defendant, casting Thompson—the person responsible for injuring Henderson—in the role of the victim to whom the jury owed more sympathy than the actual injured party. This invited the jury to make *437 decisions on improper bases like prejudice or biases about race, aggression, and victimhood.⁸

¶36 During closing arguments, Thompson's counsel alluded to racist stereotypes about Black women as untrustworthy and motivated by the desire to acquire an unearned financial windfall. Defense counsel argued that Henderson's injuries were minimal and intimated that the sole reason she had proceeded to trial was that she saw the collision as an opportunity for financial gain. Id. at 1195 ("And it seems pretty evident that the reason we're going through this exercise is because the ask is for three and a half million dollars."), 1198 (arguing that Henderson did not inform one of her doctors about the collision soon enough "because $3.5 million hadn't coalesced in her mind yet"). Defense counsel's argument that Henderson was exaggerating or fabricating her injuries appealed to these negative and false stereotypes about Black women being untrustworthy, lazy, deceptive, and greedy.⁹ Presenting a case in this way can allow jurors to make decisions on impermissible grounds rooted in prejudice or biases about race and money.

¶37 Additionally, defense counsel relied on racist stereotypes about Black people and us-versus-them descriptions to undermine the credibility of Henderson and her witnesses. For example, defense counsel suggested that Henderson had probably asked her friends and family to lie for her, as evidenced by their shared use of a popular idiom—"life of the party"—to describe her. Id. at 1213. This argument *438 was akin to the prosecutorial misconduct we condemned in Monday, where the prosecutor asserted that Black witnesses were unreliable because there was a “code” that “[B]lack folk don’t testify against [B]lack folk.’’ 171 Wash.2d at 676, 257 P.3d 551 (quoting the record). Intimating that the Black witnesses had joined together to lie for the Black plaintiff could invite jurors to suspect them as a group and to make decisions based on biases about race and truthfulness. Similarly, defense counsel argued that Henderson’s chiropractor was likely to lie for her because they had more than just a doctor-patient relationship, implying that hiring her to work in his office demonstrated impropriety in their relationship. This strategy could open the door to speculation that plays directly on prejudice or biases about race and sexuality.

[24] [25] ¶38 Trial judges abuse their discretion in denying an evidentiary hearing on a motion for a new trial when presented with a prima facie showing that an objective observer could view race as a factor in the verdict. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 665, 444 P.3d 1172. Courts have an obligation to ensure that trials are conducted fairly and to recognize when substantial justice has not been done. Id. at 661-62, 444 P.3d 1172; Severns Motor Co., 35 Wash.2d at 604, 214 P.2d 516. In this case, the trial judge acknowledged that the comments defense counsel made in closing had “racial overtones” “in some contexts” but then failed to engage in any analysis of what effect the racially coded language could have had on the jury. 1 CP at 181. This was an opportunity missed to apply that acknowledgement to the case and to recognize how an objective observer could view the defense’s comments as causing racial bias to become a factor in the verdict. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 665, 444 P.3d 1172.

1025 [26] ¶39 Rather than considering the perspective of the objective observer under Berhe, the trial court judge viewed the facts from her own perspective. She agreed with Thompson’s counsel that it was fair to describe Henderson’s demeanor during cross-examination as “combative” and “confrontational,” opining that this language should be excused *439 because the term was “race neutral” and tied to the evidence. Br. of Resp’t at 34-39; 1 CP at 180. Paradoxically, the trial court also acknowledged that “using the terms combative in reference to the plaintiff and intimidated in reference to the defendant can raise such bias.” 1 CP at 180 (emphasis added). As this court explained in Berhe, a race-neutral alternative explanation does not excuse the effect of language that appeals to racial bias. 193 Wash.2d at 666, 444 P.3d 1172.

[27] [28] ¶40 When a participant in the trial uses language that could evoke racist stereotypes, courts should not presume that such language has no effect—on them or on the jurors. The harm in an appeal to racial bias is in its effect on the decision-maker, regardless of the intent behind the reference, because “people will act on … bias far more often if reasons exist giving plausible deniability.” Saintcalle, 178 Wash.2d at 48-49, 309 P.3d 326. Indeed, trial courts should be deeply concerned about the possibility that racism has affected any trial, and courts should grant a new trial when an objective observer could conclude that racism was a factor in the verdict. Cf. State v. Lahman, 17 Wash. App. 2d 925, 938, 488 P.3d 881 (2021).

¶41 An objective observer could conclude that the themes and arguments advanced by defense counsel suggested Henderson and her witnesses were not credible because of their race, and considering the totality of the circumstances of this trial, an objective observer could therefore conclude that racism affected the verdict. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 666, 444 P.3d 1172. Henderson has established a prima facie case entitling her to an evidentiary hearing on her motion for a new trial.

C. The Burden at the Hearing

[29] [30] [31] ¶42 When a party raises a prima facie claim that racial bias affected the verdict, the court must hold a hearing to determine whether an objective observer under the GR 37 standard could conclude that racial bias was a factor in the verdict. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 666, 444 P.3d 1172; CR 59(e). If the evidence, taken as *440 true, permits an inference that an objective observer could reach this conclusion, the party has made a prima facie showing that a new trial should be ordered. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 666, 444 P.3d 1172. At that juncture, the trial court must presume that it affected the verdict, and the party allegedly responsible for introducing the appeals to bias has the burden to prove it did not affect the verdict. Cf. Monday, 171 Wash.2d at 680, 257 P.3d 551 (placing the burden on the State to prove that prosecutorial misconduct did not affect the verdict in a criminal case). If the party that benefited from an appeal to racial bias cannot prove it did not affect the verdict, then substantial justice has not been done, and the court must order a new trial. As in the criminal context, where racial bias has had an effect on the verdict, we will not consider any claim that the error was harmless. Zamora, 199 Wash.2d at 721, 512 P.3d 512.

[32] ¶43 Applying this standard, we reverse the decision below and remand for the trial court to conduct a hearing on Henderson's motion for a new trial. On remand, Henderson's case should be reassigned to a different judge in light of the opinions the judge has already expressed as to the reasons for Thompson's counsel's behavior, as well as the reasons Henderson was excluded from the courtroom when the jury returned its verdict. State v. McEnroe, 181 Wash.2d 375, 387, 333 P.3d 402 (2014) (A case may be reassigned if "the trial judge will exercise discretion on remand regarding the very issue that triggered the appeal and has already been exposed to prohibited information, expressed an opinion on the merits, or otherwise prejudged the issue." (footnotes omitted)).

¶44 We next turn to Henderson's claim that the trial court erred by refusing to 1026 consider sanctions for Thompson's discovery violations.

II. Discovery Sanctions

[33] [34] [35] [36] [37] ¶45 "[A] spirit of cooperation and forthrightness during the discovery process is necessary for the proper *441 functioning of modern trials." Wash. State Physicians Ins. Exch. & Ass'n v. Fisons Corp., 122 Wash.2d 299, 342, 858 P.2d 1054 (1993). Our civil rules require parties to engage in discovery in good faith and provide sanctions for violations of the rules. CR 26, 37. Parties "must fully answer all interrogatories and all requests for production, unless a specific and clear objection is made." Fisons, 122 Wash.2d at 354, 858 P.2d 1054 (citing CR 33(a), 34(b)). Our liberal discovery rules aim to make civil trials "a fair contest with the basic issues and facts disclosed to the fullest practicable extent." Id. at 342, 858 P.2d 1054 (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Gammon v. Clark Equip. Co., 38 Wash. App. 274, 280, 686 P.2d 1102 (1984)). "This system obviously cannot succeed without the full cooperation of the parties," so courts have authority to deter "unjustified or unexplained resistance to discovery" through sanctions. Id. (quoting Gammon, 38 Wash. App. at 280, 686 P.2d 1102). The sanction rules grant judges considerable discretion "to determine what sanctions are proper in a given case" in order to "reduce the reluctance of courts to impose sanctions." Id. at 339, 858 P.2d 1054 (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Cooper v. Viking Ventures, 53 Wash. App. 739, 742-43, 770 P.2d 659 (1989)).

[38] [39] [40] [41] [42] ¶46 When a party intentionally withholds or destroys evidence, the trial court may issue a spoliation instruction for the jury to draw an inference that the missing evidence would be unfavorable to the party at fault. Pier 67, Inc. v. King County, 89 Wash.2d 379, 385-86, 573 P.2d 2 (1977) ("[W]here relevant evidence which would properly be a part of a case is within the control of a party whose interests it would naturally be to produce it and [they] fail[] to do so, without satisfactory explanation, the only inference which the finder of fact may draw is that such evidence would be unfavorable to [them]."). Courts consider the potential importance or relevance of the missing evidence and the culpability of the adverse party. Henderson v. Tyrrell, 80 Wash. App. 592, 607, 910 P.2d 522 (1996). The culpable conduct "must be connected to the party against whom a *442 sanction is sought." Cook v. Tarbert Logging, Inc., 190 Wash. App. 448, 462, 360 P.3d 855 (2015). Courts consider "[w]hether destruction of the evidence gave the culpable party an investigative advantage." Id. Sanctions decisions are reviewed for an abuse of discretion involving a decision that is manifestly unreasonable or based on untenable grounds. Fisons, 122 Wash.2d at 338-39, 858 P.2d 1054.

¶47 Here, Henderson sought information about Probe's surveillance throughout the discovery period—repeatedly, using multiple mechanisms provided in the civil rules. Henderson issued a subpoena duces tecum and deposed Slaeker, the person the defense team identified as responsible for the surveillance video. When Slaeker indicated that his notes informed a report on Probe's surveillance of Henderson, Henderson served interrogatories and requests for production seeking the report. But the defense team avoided producing any additional information and evaded a court order directing it to do so. They produced the purported report over a year later, just two weeks before trial—only after a court order ruling it was not privileged—and too late for Henderson to conduct additional discovery. Henderson had no opportunity to verify its contents or authorship. Cf. Cook, 190 Wash. App. at 462, 360 P.3d 855; Henderson, 80 Wash. App. at 607-08, 910 P.2d 522. This is, by definition, prejudice to the litigant.

¶48 Additionally, Slaeker repeatedly stated he reviewed notes that were in existence at the time of his deposition. Slaeker equivocated about which notes these were, but he was consistent about the fact that he used some surveillance-related documentation to prepare for the deposition for hours—documentation that was never produced to Henderson.

¶49 Last, the defense produced a document indicating that Probe conducted more than 78 hours of surveillance on Henderson 1027 over a period of 9 months and repeatedly indicated that multiple surveillance recordings existed; yet, the defense never produced more than the 17 minutes of video *443 from March 15, 2011. They never provided an explanation for why there was no video from any other day of surveillance in those 9 months. Even if there truly was no other video beyond what the defense produced, almost all of the 78 hours of surveillance remained unaccounted for. The absence of any additional surveillance video conflicts with Slaeker's testimony that he had handwritten notes and text messages (that he did not produce) from those hours of surveillance. If he did not see Henderson during that surveillance and saw her only for the 17 minutes of video produced, there seems to be no need to take detailed, but unproduced, notes nor any need to have discussions via text message.

[43] ¶50 It is difficult to conceive of what more Henderson could have done to identify the evidence she was seeking, determine that it was discoverable, and utilize the rules of civil procedure to obtain the material. Cf. Fisons, 122 Wash.2d at 354, 858 P.2d 1054. Rather than meeting the expectation of cooperation and forthrightness we require in our civil legal system, the defense took advantage of every opportunity to avoid complying with Henderson's very clear and reasonable requests. Id. at 342, 858 P.2d 1054. There is no doubt that Thompson's defense team understood the relevance and significance of the video. Cook, 190 Wash. App. at 462, 360 P.3d 855. Particularly given how the defense team continued to behave toward Henderson and her legal team at trial, it is difficult to explain this conduct as anything other than a pattern of underestimating and undervaluing the position of both Henderson and her counsel. See Frank M. McClellan, The Dark Side of Tort Reform: Searching for Racial Justice, 48 Rutgers L. Rev. 761, 761-774, 795-96 (1996) (explaining how private attorneys often improperly consider the race of both plaintiffs and their attorneys in evaluating the value of tort cases). Even absent the later appeals to racial bias during trial, this kind of obstructionist discovery behavior would typically incur sanctions ranging from limitations of the use of the material at trial, instructions to the jury on spoliation, monetary sanctions *444 against the party engaging in these tactics, or, in the most egregious of circumstances, dismissal of the matter entirely. Henderson, 80 Wash. App. at 605, 910 P.2d 522 ("the severity of a particular act ... determines the appropriate remedy").

[44] ¶51 Henderson demonstrated prejudice resulting from the defense's refusal to produce any additional surveillance-related evidence. As Henderson's claim involved a preexisting condition that was aggravated by the collision, the defense's strategy was to prove that her symptoms had either remained in or returned to a relatively manageable status. The 17-minute surveillance video depicting Henderson at work with no observable tics could be viewed as strong evidence that she was not suffering 9 months after the collision, and it formed the basis of the defense experts' opinions to that effect. Without any information about what the other 9 months of surveillance revealed, Henderson was completely unable to show that those 17 minutes were not representative of how she was managing after the collision. Given that the withheld evidence would have been crucial to Henderson's ability to challenge the 17-minute surveillance video and the defense's repeated refusals to comply with Henderson's many clear requests, we agree that a spoliation instruction should have issued and that some additional sanction also would have been proper. Instead, the trial court chose not to sanction the defense's conduct at all, resulting in an effective endorsement of the defense team's conduct.

[45] ¶46 ¶47 ¶48 ¶49 ¶50 ¶51 ¶52 ¶52 Trial courts have wide latitude to determine what sanctions are appropriate. Fisons, 122 Wash.2d at 355, 858 P.2d 1054. Henderson has continued to request sanctions under Fisons for the defense team's conduct during discovery, and she also argues that the defense should be sanctioned for making appeals to racial bias throughout trial. Sanctions are mandatory when a party violates a civil rule. Id. The court should determine the severity of the sanction commensurate with the severity of the wrongdoing in order to serve the purposes of sanctions "to deter, to punish, to 1028 compensate[,] *445 and to educate." Id. at 356, 858 P.2d 1054. Intent is not a prerequisite to imposing sanctions, though the court may take the wrongdoer's state of mind into account when determining the severity of the sanctions to impose. Id. at 345, 356, 858 P.2d 1054. When the court finds intent to spoil or hide evidence—which appears likely to have occurred here—the more severe sanctions would be appropriate. Sanctions can range from reprimands,¹⁰ excluding evidence,¹¹ instructions on negative inference,¹² default judgment or dismissal,¹³ or monetary sanctions on the party, attorney, or firm.¹⁴ While some delaying tactics might be common in civil trials, the degree of the defense team's refusal to cooperate in this case was egregious. Thompson's defense team failed to produce relevant evidence despite Henderson's counsel's painstaking efforts to obtain it through the discovery rules. Ultimately, it is the trial court's role to determine what sanctions should be imposed and against whom. Id. at 355, 858 P.2d 1054. We therefore remand to the trial court to determine whether to impose sanctions up to and including a new trial excluding the surveillance video, Slaeker's testimony, or both, as well as reasonable costs and attorney fees for the first trial.¹⁵ Id.

CONCLUSION

[53] ¶53 Our legal system is based on the premise of judicial neutrality, procedural fairness, and equal treatment. We know our system has not lived up to its promises, even as *446 we have reaffirmed our commitment to them. The legal system is made up of people—lawyers, judges, jurors, and others—and it shares in our human strengths and weaknesses. All of us have the capacity to push our system closer to the ideals and promises of justice; we also have the ability to continue to perpetuate harm. To turn our system squarely toward fairness requires conscious effort and honesty when we fail.

[54] ¶54 Courts take a step toward achieving greater justice when the people who comprise them comprehend the legacy of injustices built into our legal systems, actively work to prevent racism before it occurs, and also recognize how our participation in these systems may reify them. One way judges can do so is to ensure that we bring reality into sharp focus in our legal analysis. When a new trial is sought on the ground that racial bias affected the verdict, the facts must be viewed through the lens of an objective observer who is aware “that implicit, institutional, and unconscious biases, in addition to purposeful discrimination, have influenced jury verdicts in Washington State.” Berhe, 193 Wash.2d at 665, 444 P.3d 1172. In a hearing based on prima facie evidence that racial bias possibly affected the verdict, the court must presume that it did and the party seeking to uphold the verdict must prove how it did not. If they cannot prove that racial bias was not a factor, that verdict is fundamentally incompatible with substantial justice. We reverse and remand to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

WE CONCUR:

Gonzales, CJ.

Johnson, J.

Madsen, J.

Owens, J.

Stephen, J.

Yu, J.

Whitener, J.

GORDON McCLOUD, J. (concurring)

1029 ¶55 I agree with the majority's conclusion that misconduct tainted the discovery process and that racism against the Black female plaintiff, Janelle Henderson, tainted the jury trial. I also agree with *447 the majority's decision that the remedy for Henderson's prima facie showing that racial bias was a factor in the verdict is a trial court evidentiary hearing in which the defendant bears the burden to prove that it was not such a factor. And I further agree with the majority's direction to the trial court to determine the appropriate sanctions for defendant's discovery violations.

¶56 I write separately only to express disagreement with the majority's characterization of certain aspects of defense's closing argument. As the majority notes, three of Henderson's lay witnesses used an identical phrase, “life of the party,” to describe Henderson before the accident. Majority at _____. In closing argument, defense counsel argued that the witnesses' shared use of this phrase suggested that they coordinated their testimony in advance of trial. 3 Verbatim Report of Proceedings (June 6, 2019) at 1213.

¶57 The majority characterizes this argument as an impermissible appeal to racial bias and compares it to the prosecutorial misconduct we condemned in State v. Monday, 171 Wash.2d 667, 678-79, 257 P.3d 551 (2011). Majority at _____. In that case, the prosecutor explicitly argued that Black witnesses were unreliable because there was a “code” that “[B]lack folk don't testify against [B]lack folk.” Monday, 171 Wash.2d at 676, 257 P.3d 551 (quoting the record). We condemned the prosecutor's argument because there was no evidence in the record to support it and because it amounted to an “attempt to discount several witnesses' testimony on the basis of race alone.” Id. at 678, 257 P.3d 551.

¶58 By contrast, in this case, the defense used testimony in evidence in order to attack the witnesses' credibility by suggesting prior planning. In other words, there was evidentiary support for the limited argument that these three witnesses' testimony suggested that they might have coordinated their approach. In my view, that limited argument was not an improper appeal to racial bias.

¶59 Similarly, I believe that parties must be able to explore witnesses' financial and other interests that might *448 undermine their credibility. For that reason, I disagree with the majority's conclusion that it was an improper appeal to racial bias for defense counsel to argue that the trial was all about "Henderson's desire for a financial windfall." Majority at ____.¹

¶60 I nevertheless agree with the majority that the balance of the transcript provides a prima facie showing that the trial was infected with racial bias. I therefore fully join the rest of the opinion.

Footnotes

- ¹ See, e.g., State v. Towessnute, 197 Wash.2d 574, 575, 486 P.3d 111 (2021) (recalling the mandate of State v. Towessnute, 89 Wash. 478, 154 P. 805 (1916), because the 1916 opinion's racist language and conclusions "continue[d] to perpetrate injustice by their very existence"); Garfield County Transp. Auth. v. State, 196 Wash.2d 378, 390 n.1, 473 P.3d 1205 (2020) (overturning as incorrect and harmful Price v. Evergreen Cemetery Co. of Seattle, 57 Wash.2d 352, 357 P.2d 702 (1960), which permitted a cemetery to refuse to allow a Black family to bury their child there); GR 37(a) (rule intended to eliminate the unfair exclusion of potential jurors based on race or ethnicity); State v. Berhe, 193 Wash.2d 647, 665, 444 P.3d 1172 (2019) (adopting the GR 37 objective observer standard to assess whether one could view implicit racial bias as a factor in the jury's verdict, necessitating a new trial); State v. Monday, 171 Wash.2d 667, 680, 257 P.3d 551 (2011) (condemning appeals to racial bias as "fundamentally undermin[ing] the principle of equal justice").
- ² The defense repeatedly referred to "video recordings" and "CDs of video surveillance" in the plural, later taking the position that they had done so in error and that the items were actually singular. 2 CP at 217; 1 CP at 72.
- ³ See Derrick A. Bell, Jr., Racism In American Courts: Cause For Black Disruption Or Despair?, 61 Cal. L. Rev. 165, 165-66 (1973) ("Perhaps unconsciously, those who have major authority in the legal process tend to underplay the seriousness of racism in the judicial system, acknowledging the need for more progress, while extolling the elimination of overt segregation in the courts. These attitudes show little understanding of the continuing impact of racial bias on [B]lack victims of judicial injustice.").
- ⁴ Cf. In re Takuji Yamashita, 30 Wash. 234, 70 P. 482 (1902) (denying a bar applicant's admission on the basis of race), disapproved, 143 Wn.2d xxxiii-lix (2001); People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399, 404-05 (1854) (excluding the testimony of witnesses of color on the basis of race).
- ⁵ CR 59(a)(2) permits a new trial on the basis of "[m]isconduct of prevailing party or jury." Under that part of the rule, a new trial is warranted when "(1) the conduct complained of is misconduct, (2) the misconduct is prejudicial, (3) the moving party objected to the misconduct at trial, and (4) the misconduct was not cured by the court's instructions." Teter v. Deck, 174 Wash.2d 207, 226, 274 P.3d 336 (2012). That basis for a new trial contains procedural prerequisites that may render it inapplicable here. In particular, Henderson is the prevailing party, as the jury rendered a small judgment in her favor.
- ⁶ For example, racial microaggressions are "often carried out in subtle, automatic, or unconscious forms," but their cumulative effects take a toll both psychologically and physiologically. Daniel G. Solórzano & Lindsay Pérez Huber, Racial Microaggressions: Using Critical Race Theory To Respond To Everyday Racism 34 (James A. Banks ed., 2020). "For example, those targeted by everyday racism can become angry or frustrated and develop feelings of self-doubt; their blood pressure may rise and their heart rate may increase. Over time, they may develop more serious symptomatic conditions such as hypertension, depression, and anxiety." Id. at 42 (citations omitted) (citing studies). "Some studies have attributed more fatal conditions such as cardiovascular disease and even increased morbidity to race-related stressors such as microaggressions." Id. at 43 (citing studies).
- ⁷ The term "dog whistle" refers to speaking in code to a target audience, where the use of coded language permits the speaker to claim plausible deniability as to that objective. Ian Haney López, Dog Whistle Politics: How Coded Racial

Gordon McCloud, J.

Madsen, J.

All Citations

200 Wash.2d 417, 518 P.3d 1011

Appeals Have Reinvented Racism & Wrecked the Middle Class 4 (2014). See Adam R. Shapiro, The Racist Roots of the Dog Whistle, Wash. Post, Aug. 21, 2020, <https://www.washingtonpost.com/outlook/2020/08/21/racist-roots-dog-whistle/> [<https://perma.cc/59C3-JKYG>], for a discussion of the origins and evolution of this term.

8 See Megan Armstrong, From Lynching to Central Park Karen: How White Women Weaponize White Womanhood, 32 Hastings Women's L.J. 27, 32-42 (2021).

9 See Marilyn Yarbrough & Crystal Bennet, Cassandra and the "Sistahs": The Peculiar Treatment of African American Women in the Myth of Women as Liars, 3 J. Gender Race & Just. 625, 636-39 (2000) (describing the myths of the "Jezebel" and the "welfare queen," among others). The myth of the "welfare queen" refers to a woman who purposefully "shuns work" in order to live off public benefits, "a non-existent social phenomenon based on a singular incident of abuse of welfare benefits by one woman in Chicago in the 1970s." Id.; Brittney Cooper, Eloquent Rage: A Black Feminist Discovers Her Superpower 197 (2018) (explaining the harm of the "welfare queen" myth).

10 See Miller v. Badgley, 51 Wash. App. 285, 303, 753 P.2d 530 (1988).

11 See Scott v. Grader, 105 Wash. App. 136, 142, 18 P.3d 1150 (2001).

12 See Henderson, 80 Wash. App. at 606-07, 910 P.2d 522.

13 See Magaña v. Hyundai Motor Am., 167 Wash.2d 570, 583-84, 220 P.3d 191 (2009); Rivers v. Wash. State Conf. of Mason Contractors, 145 Wash.2d 674, 686, 41 P.3d 1175 (2002).

14 See Fisons, 122 Wash.2d at 356, 858 P.2d 1054; Madden v. Foley, 83 Wash. App. 385, 392, 922 P.2d 1364 (1996).

15 The trial court may consider in its sanctions analysis these pretrial discovery violations as well as defense counsel's conduct during trial.

1 I do not read the majority's decision to undermine our precedent concerning the importance of probing cross-examination designed to address witness credibility. Our adversarial system requires courts to permit searching cross-examination of witnesses to test their perception, recall, and reliability. Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308, 316, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1974) ("Cross-examination is the principal means by which the believability of a witness and the truth of his testimony are tested."); Anderson v. Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc., 172 Wash.2d 593, 607, 260 P.3d 857 (2011) ("[E]vidence is tested by the adversarial process within the crucible of cross-examination, and adverse parties are permitted to present other challenging evidence." (citing Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 596, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993)); State v. Darden, 145 Wash.2d 612, 619, 41 P.3d 1189 (2002).